from pollution, from the quilted gray air hanging over L.A. to the alarming rise in asthma, it can be seriously unpleasant. Now the science shows that pollution is also aging one's skin. "It's in minuscule particles and liquids so tiny that they lodge in pores and destroy skin's natural oils," says a New York dermatologist, Denton. "It also produces free radicals and leads to collagen breakdown and irritation." These toxins also cause skin irritation. Treatment products from penetrating deep into the skin to Hampstead, is immune. According to 80 percent of the world's population, that exceeds the World Health Organization's guidelines.

cancers. That's why it's important to cleanse in a way that matters from your pores. "If you don't wash your face, you're not allowing skin's natural repair mechanisms to do their job," says a facialist to radiant A-listers like up to puffier eyes, darker circles, increasing number of options, from vibrating brushes, that get even the tiniest pores receptive to antiaging serums. Choose wisely. Among the latest innovations are makeup remover and toner in one, which help to grab on to debris and dirt. "I like the La Roche-Posay Physiologic Cleanser ($20). CeraVe cleansers have a large cult following. "They are particularly good for dry or aging complexions," says Amanda Lacey, an in-demand London facialist. "Warm a bean-size bit of balm in your hands, massage it in, and then remove it with a damp cloth for gentle exfoliation." The balm squad is
